TO ALL ACURILEANS AND INFORMATION PROFESSIONALS

The 40th Annual Conference celebration of the Association of Caribbean University, Research and Institutional Libraries in the Caribbean, to be held June 6-12, 2010, in Santo Domingo, is an excellent opportunity to exchange ideas with colleagues, to interact with information product and services providers, share knowledge and experiences regarding the best practices in the library and information field, and keep abreast of advances in the field.

Library specialists in the Dominican Republic, through the Local Organizing Committee, are working with lots of enthusiasm to make of this event a successful one for all attendees.

It will be a great honor to the Organizing Committee to receive all attendees in the Dominican Republic.

Conference Dedication

PRELIMINARY PROGRAM

Conference Objective

This conference seeks to present the key elements of the Evidence-based practice, applied to the library and information field, in an effort to contribute to the betterment of the library and information practice in the Caribbean. It pursues to present, in theory and practical implementation, how librarians, archivists and other information professionals can acquire new knowledge, improve their different professional skills to ensure best practices in the daily work; and, in so doing, contribute to strengthen ACURIL's continuous learning Community of Practice.

In 2000, Jonathan D. Eldredge, of the University of New Mexico, in his article Evidence-based librarianship : An overview (Bull Med Libr Assoc. 2000 October; 88(4): 289–302), submitted that Evidence-Based Librarianship (EBL):

- seeks to improve library practice by utilizing the best-available evidence combined with a pragmatic perspective developed from working experiences in librarianship;
- applies the best-available evidence, whether based upon either quantitative or qualitative research methods;

- encourages the pursuit of increasingly rigorous research strategies to support decisions affecting library practice;
- values research in all its diverse forms and encourages its communication; and,
- supports the adoption of practice guidelines and standards developed by expert committees based upon the best-available evidence, but not as an endorsement of adhering to rigid protocols.

In 2004, Andrew Booth, at the University of Sheffield, in England, defined Evidence-based practice for information professionals as "... an approach that promotes the collection, interpretation and integration of valid, important and applicable user-reported, librarian observed, and research-derived evidence. In the article On evidence-based practice, that appeared in Vol. 3, p.335, of Handbook of library training practice and development (edited by Alan Brine, published in 2009 by Ashgate), Booth expanded the definition adding that "...The best available evidence, moderated by user needs and preferences, is applied to improve the quality of professional judgements. EBLIP involves asking answerable questions, finding, critically appraising and then utilizing research evidence from relevant disciplines in daily practice. In thus attempt to integrate user-reported, practioner-observed and research-derived evidence as an explicit basis for decision-making".

And, in 2007, at the IFLA's World Congress in Durham, South Africa, Edgardo Civalero, of the Universidad de Córdoba, in Argentina, pinpointed that with the EBLIP process, applied to action research, librarians can collect the evidence –using a series of qualitative tools- and use it for building theoretical knowledge in order to improve their work and their profession. From this viewpoint, after putting something into practice they will be able to know whether it worked as expected or not, make any change if it is necessary, and test the whole process again, searching more and new evidence. The method becomes a progressive helix that leads librarians to continuously evaluate their activities and services and improve them according of their final users' needs.

The 40th ACURIL Conference program is being designed so that attendees can acquire the new knowledge and professional skills of the EBLIP, consider and share the experience, reflect on how to integrate the evidence-based process into the particular daily work, and be able to document the process and disseminate and share the experience with other colleagues.
